

The opportunity to keep the greedy corporations from further controlling our airways is at hand. Fewer companies managing many programing sources is not good for the general citizenry of our country: because fewer opinions will follow along with fewer owners. The centralization of management has already hurt the nation's ability to receive diversified and independent programing. Please do not let the fat cats get fatter. In fact, they should be getting thinner. The airways of the USA belong to the people not to companies. If companies use and manage the airways they should realize their hold is never permanent. Please think of the public airways as a national trust and not a a "strip mine". Some of our best laws are 'old' laws. The old laws should not be discarded without public participation from all affected parties, even when this process seems slow and cumbersome it is the process of democracy and without it what will we become ?
